RESOLUTION.

With the letter of 13th August 1900, read above, certain orders were issued regarding the use and significance of the distant signal, and a method was suggested for facilitating the introduction of the system desired. A draft for a modification of those portions of the General Rules, which relate to signalling, was circulated for opinion with the letter of 29th October 1900.

2. After further discussions extending over a considerable period, a meeting was held at Simla on 28th August 1903 to settle the general principles to be adhered to in signalling trains on Indian railways; and the results arrived at were circulated in the Public Works Department letter No. 13 R. T., dated 8th January 1904. These proposals have been generally accepted by all Railway Administrations, to be introduced on the various lines as the necessity for so doing becomes evident; and, as they involve certain modifications in the existing General Rules for working Indian railways by the substitution of a Stop Signal or a Warning Signal for the Distant Signal prescribed in General Rule No. 72, it becomes necessary to regularise their introduction.
